

Amanda Drury

Associate Professor in General Nursing, Dublin City University, Ireland

Biography

Dr Amanda Drury is an Associate Professor in General Nursing in the School of Nursing, Psychotherapy and Community Health, Dublin City University, Ireland. She has over fifteen years of experience in cancer care across clinical and academic settings, and holds a PhD and MSc in Cancer Care from Trinity College Dublin.

Her research interests span the areas of supportive and palliative care in cancer and chronic illness. Her research aims to enhance understanding of the health and well-being of people affected by cancer, including the personal, social and healthcare factors which influence these outcomes.

She is a member of the European Cancer Mission Board and a Board Member of the European Oncology Nursing Society (EONS), and Chair of the EONS Research Working Group.