

Mayse Nababteh

Head, International Fundraising & Development Department, King Hussein Cancer Foundation, Jordan

Biography

Mayse Nababteh is currently the Head of International Fundraising & Development Department at the King Hussein Cancer Foundation (KHCF), the largest community-based organization in Jordan dedicated to combating cancer. Since joining KHCF in 2007, Mayse has enriched her experience across the organization in a wide scope of positions ranging from fundraising, patient and refugee support, youth engagement, advocacy efforts, corporate relations and international development management.

Prior to that, Mayse had extensive managerial experience within the private corporate sector at ARAMEX International where she served as a Corporate Customer Service Manager working closely on customer relations. Mayse has also completed an internship in the U.K. specialized in promoting the involvement of young people in political participation.

Mayse received two international academic scholarships and holds an M.A. from The University of Nottingham in International Relations and a degree from the London School of Economics as a Hansard Society/Chevening research scholar specializing in British public policy; her research focusing on youth participation in politics. Following her passion towards changing the lives of others, Mayse was also certified as a Dale Carnegie Trainer providing training to individuals and corporates alike in the field of Communication.

Mayse believes in each person's individual responsibility towards making the world a better place and is an avid volunteer and advisory board member in areas that support education and the development of youth, supporting local non-profit organizations and is a Chevening Alumni Board Member.

She is hopeful for the future of providing equitable access to cancer care for all patients seeking treatment from Jordan and the region especially those who are most vulnerable.
